Dear ASC Stakeholder,

I am encouraging you, as a member of the Affiliate Societies Council and/or an ASC stakeholder to be an active partner to initiate nominations of individuals for the ASC Outstanding Engineers and Scientists Award.

First, ask professionals on your personal network and/or your professional society membership to submit nominations. Include past award winners, employers, and community leaders in your request. It would be a great tribute if there would be a nomination from each society.

Nominees do not need to be members of your society. Specific instructions and criteria are on the ASC Web Site at http://ascdayton.org/nomination_guidelines.pdf and http://ascdayton.org/nomination_form.doc. The attached flyer outlines the categories, guidelines, and submission procedures. Updated re-submissions are encouraged for previous nominees who have not been selected.

Second, take an extra step to nominate current shakers and movers in the scientific and engineering community for their outstanding achievements and contributions in any scientific and engineering field in the areas of Higher Education, Research, Technical Leadership or contribution in any recognized scientific or engineering field. Consider individuals who have received awards from their employer or professional society. This award represents the Best of the Best. Feel free to collaborate with peers to nominate outstanding engineers and scientists who can join previous awardees as models for today's youth and emerging leaders.

The collective achievements and contributions made by over 428 recipients since 1971 form a tapestry of creativity, innovation, and research results for the benefit of your stakeholders and the nation. The new class of awardees will represent the latest scientific and engineering achievements in the Greater Dayton/Miami Valley. They are the Best of the Best.

Feel free to contact Amy Solko, Dr. Perry Yaney or me if you need additional information or have any questions about the process.

The ASC Awards Committee looks forward to receiving your nominations. Please submit your nomination for this year's selection cycle by November 18, 2011.

With many thanks for your valuable assistance.
